Blink — playtest sheet

RULES V0.26 · ONE SHEET PER GAME players ____ date _____ start _____ end _____

Play the base game only. No objectives module, no expansions — those are not tuned for these rules. The five questions below are the ones the design is actually stuck on; everything else can wait for the feedback form.

1 Movement out of the meld — the big unknown

Movement is no longer printed on your board. Every card you play this round lets you move one unit. Tick how that felt at the table.

moves used per turn, typically	none 1 2 3 4+ wanted more mostly used to…	reinforce escape claim ground didn't bother did a long meld ever feel like too much movement?	yes no did anyone forget the moves their meld had bought?	yes no

2 Did the shape of a meld ever matter?

Melds now only decide how many cards you spend. Straight of four and quadruple do the same work. Did anyone care which they held — and did anyone build toward a bigger meld on purpose?

shape felt…	irrelevant mildly still interesting anyone hold cards to build a big meld?	yes no

3 The cost of matching the winner — and how often you cashed

Match the winner's card count and lose, and one card you played is set aside for 1 gold and goes to the shared pile; the meld that ranked last takes 1 gold. Tally one mark per card you cashed instead of using on the map (the sim predicts about one in three). Count for yourself only.

cards cashed _____ of _____ played · did cashing ever feel like the obvious choice, with no decision in it? yes / no did anyone ask how many cards they could use?	yes no (the rule exists to stop that) giving up a card for matching the winner felt…	a real cost barely noticed too harsh did anyone play FEWER cards on purpose to dodge it?	yes no the last-place coin felt…	welcome pointless like charity

4 What ended the game, and did it land?

The simulator says a suit's advanced deck always runs dry before anyone places a twentieth unit. If that happened, did the ending feel earned or abrupt?

ended because…	a suit ran out someone placed 20 units the ending felt…	earned abrupt nobody noticed it coming

5 The coin a won tile pays

Win a duel, empty the tile, move in — take 1 gold. A duel that kills one unit off a stack of two pays nothing. It is the newest rule in the game and the reason attacking is worth the card it costs.

did anyone attack for the coin rather than the ground?	yes no hard to tell was "only when you TAKE the tile" remembered?	always mostly kept slipping did fighting feel worth doing?	yes still not too tempting now how tight was gold overall?	broke tight comfortable swimming

Anything you had to look up, argue about, or invent

Best and worst moment

Scores — seat / total / population / victory row / dominance / gold left would play again 1 2 3 4 5 · rules were clear 1 2 3 4 5